THE ALUMNI

Large Number of Graduates Graduates Gathered at School Auditorium Monday Night.

The Alumni of the Marion Graded School was held at the school chapel on Monday night of this week, and was by far the most successful of the many pleasant events of this kind that have been had since the organization of the school in 1894. The programme included addresses by several of the graduates, vocal solos, piano solos, alumni songs, and music rendered by the Marion Silver Cornet Band.

The welcome address, which was made by Attorney W. H. Clark, was well delivered and received with much applause as he told of the close and lasting friendship that existed between the members of the "Alumni." He reminded his fellow graduates that whatever mistakes had by them been made during their school days they were now forgotten, and that they come together as a happy band and in one common cause. All were made to realize that it was not a welcome in words merely, but in spirit as well. The response, to the welcome address, which was given by Miss Ethel Hard, to be appreciated had to be heard as it was earnest, logical and forcibly delivered. By her talk, Miss Hard convinced those present that the ways of life along the path of duty are open to all and lead to distinction.

Round after round of laughter was heard as Miss Ina Price gave in very attractive style, "Cupid's Pranks in School." Miss Ina had her subject well in hand, is a splendid speaker and was at all times at perfect ease; as she told of the many pranks that cupid had played in the Marion Graded School, pointing out among the graduates many of his victims. The audience was delighted and cheer after cheer greeted her remarks.

The Valedictorian of the High School class, Miss Mary Deboe, was called upon for a speech, she being a special favorite with all of the graduates and faculty as well. Miss Deboe is one of the best speakers that has ever attended the school, and is highly entertaining; her speech upon this occasion was no exception to her usual way of doing things, and was one of the real pleasures of the evening.

The lovers of music, and especially those who are partial to vocal and instrumental solos, were delighted with the selections given by Misses Sallie Woods, Pearl Doss and Gustava Haynes. The pieces were all well rendered and proved quite a treat to those present.

One of the leading features of the alumni was the splendid music made by the "Marion Silver Cornet Band." This was especially enjoyed by those who participated in the march, as they kept step with the music, that too, with an inspiration and interest that showed the members of the alumni to be bound by ties stronger and more eternal than girders of steel.

The committee on programme, when it selected Miss Mildred Haynes to discuss "Our Graduates of Former Days," was not without reason for so doing. While a graduate of a former class and of a former year, Miss Haynes had watched with much pride the graduates of the Marion Graded School as they had gone to the different states and assumed many of the most responsible positions of trust and honor to be had. Among the long list of graduates who had brought honor to the school, after under going test after test, she made special mention of Julius Fohs, Lonny Towery, P. D. Maxwell, Kay Kevil, Albert Crider, and as she put it, "last but not least, except in point of size," Virgil Y. Moore.

The subject, "In Reminiscent Mood," as handled by Mr. Gray Rochester was one of the hits of the evening. Gray is a graduate of the High School class and is known as a ready speaker and debater. He elicited much applause from the audience. Misses Leaffa Wilborn, Ina Price and Mildred Haynes had charge of the invitations and the refreshments. The refreshments consisted of ham sandwiches, pickles, salted peanuts, ice cream, sherbet and cake. To say that these young ladies were in charge of the refreshments is a guarantee that this part of the programme was all that could have been asked for or expected.

Prof. Kee, who acted as toast-master of the occasion, had a pleasant smile and kind word for every one. While yet a young man as an instructor he is old in the popular regard. The school has had him for two terms and his good judgment to a great extent led to the excellent success of the alumni.

There were many of the old graduates present who were glad to again spend a few pleasant hours in meeting and mingling with their classmates of other days as well as to form many new acquaintances, who were members of this year's class. In short the alumni was a great success and all who attended will long remember the happy occasion.

The officers elected for next year were as follows: President, Miss Leaffa Wilborn; vice president, C. W. Haynes; treasurer, Robert Cook; secretary, Miss Mary Deboe.

The Record Building Case Reversed.

The fine two story concrete building known as the Whitehouse building, the office of which is now occupied by the RECORD-PRESS, has been in court for several months and at the June, 1906 term of the Crittenden Circuit Court, judgment was rendered against the mortgagee, John Scheas, whereby the various debts against the building were made prior and preference claims to that of the mortgagee, Scheas. Deboe and Moore, Attorneys for Scheas, appealed and the case was reversed last week.

NOT EVEN CONSIDERED

Rumors of the Consolidation of the Central Home and Bell Telephone Companies Denied.

J. C. Monteith, vice president of the Central Home Telephone Company, said yesterday that there was absolutely no truth in the report that a deal was on whereby the Bell Telephone Company had acquired or would acquire the independent telephone interests in Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri and Southern Indiana. The report was published several days ago that such a deal was on and that it was likely that the independent and Cumberland companies in this city would be consolidated. Mr. Monteith said that there was absolutely no truth in the report and that there was no foundation whatever upon which to base such a report.

"No negotiation of any kind have been entered into," said Mr. Monteith. "The report that such a deal was on doubtless originated from some uninformed person, who, hearing that the American Telephone and Telegraph Company had sold $40,000,000 of its bonds recently, did not know that the bulk of that sale was necessary for the payment of notes issued two years ago by that company and payable May 1. The statement, which originated in New York, is preposterous on its face for the reason that it would be impossible to acquire the independent interests in such a short time even if it were contemplated. Moreover, it is not likely that Frederick P. Fish would have consummated any such deal upon the eve of his retirement from office May 1, he having resigned as president, director and member of the Executive Committee of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. He was succeeded by Theodore M. Vail.

"The whole story is a fabrication from beginning to end," continued Mr. Monteith, "as far as the independent interest in the territory mentioned is concerned. However, the Central Union Telephone Company, the Bell Company operating in Indiana, has offered to withdraw all of its local exchanges from that State, excepting possibly Indianapolis, provided the independent telephone exchanges throughout the State would permit the Bell Company to connect their wires with the independent exchanges and give them just such long-distance business as could not be handled by the independents do not now reach, such as New York, Boston, Denver and New Orleans."

Mr. Monteith added that this proposition had never received favorable consideration from the independents. —Courier-Journal.

Cain-Hill.

Last Monday afternoon at Blackford Miss Myrtle Hill, the talented daughter of E. R. Hill, one of the county's most prominent citizens, was united in marriage to Mr. C. N. Cain, of Clay, Ky., son of Butler Cain, of the Weston vicinity. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. R. King.

Mrs. Cain is well known here being the sister of Mrs. J. L. Stewart at whose home she frequently visits. She has been the housekeeper for her father since her mother's death and she will be doubly missed at home on that account.

The happy couple went to the home of the groom's parents for the wedding supper and from there to Clay where the groom has a lucrative position.

The RECORD-PRESS extends congratulations.

Kentucky and Indiana Company.

The Indiana and Kentucky Fluor Spar, Lead and Zinc Mining Company with $50,000 capital was organized last Friday with the following list of officers:

Harry Watkins, president and director; M. Copher, secretary and director; J. M. Persons, general manager and director; Dr. Beeler, director Evansville; Attorney Wilson, director, Washington, Ind.; Attorney Hasse, treasurer, Evansville.

The company owns the Ebbie Hodge mine, near Emmaus, which is said to be one of the finest properties in this district and arrangements are being made to put a large force to work on this vein at once.

The well known quality of the spar from this property, and others in that vicinity, together with the personnel of the management assures the stockholders of fine dividends as soon as the roads will permit the output to be moved to the market.

DROWNS IN CREEK

Henry A. Condit Meets Death in High Waters of Crooked Creek Monday.

Monday afternoon about 4 o'clock Henry A. Condit, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Condit, was drowned in Crooked Creek near his home. No one was with him and the exact cause will never be known. The mule he was riding returned to the shore from whence they started, riderless, and from all indications on the bank had not gone in at the ford, but about forty feet below the ford, where there was a very steep bank and deep hole, and as the creek was running swiftly and was bank full from recent rains it is a mystery why he went into the creek at that deep place or why he rode into the creek at all as the place of Mr. Beard, where he had gone on a business trip, was on the same side of the creek as the Condit home. The body was searched for by all the neighbors for several hours and was recovered at 8 o'clock Monday night.

The shock was a terrible one for his parents and brothers and sisters. He was born Aug. 4, 1887, and was therefore in his twentieth year. The funeral was conducted by Rev. Benjamin Andres at the family homestead and the burial took place Tuesday afternoon at the new cemetery.

The deceased was a member of the Presbyterian church in this city and was a young man of exemplary habits and was a general favorite where known. Mr. and Mrs. Condit have the deepest sympathy of all in their great affliction.

The Boys' Brigade.

One of the principal and most interesting feature of the circus was the Boys' Brigade in the parade.

Just before the evening performance, a parade was formed in which the boys took part. They were dressed in blue uniforms and caps. And as the boys marched around the ring, they were greeted with loud applause from the audience. They had been well drilled and all through the march kept splendid time.

The Brigade is composed of about fifty boys, who take a great deal of interest in their drill work. They have only been organized about three months, and have uniforms and caps, they haven't any guns yet but expect to get them soon.

New Saddler in Town.

Mr. H. D. Sale, of Paducah, an experienced harness and saddle maker has moved to Marion and opened a harness and repair shop in the room formerly occupied by Hardin's next door to Taylor & Cannan's on Masonic corner. This is a much needed enterprise in Marion and will meet with good support and patronage right from the start. Mr. Sale comes highly recommended. For more than ten years he has worked in Rekhof's Saddle, Collar & Harness factory at Paducah.

Bishop Lane at Court House.

Rt Rev. Bishop Isaac Lane, D. D., of Jackson, Tenn., Bishop of the colored Methodist church, will speak at the court house Monday night May 13. Bishop Lane is well known throughout our Southland and next to Booker T. Washington, is regarded a leader of his race. The people of Marion know him, he having preached during the Conference of M. The Nerve of Foley

By FRANK H. SPEARMAN

Copyright, 1900, by Frank H. Spearman

HERE had been rumors all winter that the engineers were going to strike. Certainly we of the operating department had been warned enough. Yet in the railroad life there is always friction in some quarter. The railroad man sleeps like the soldier, with an ear alert, but just the same he sleeps, for with waking comes duty.

Our engineers were good fellows. If they had faults they were American faults—rashness, a liberality bordering on extravagance and a headstrong, violent way of reaching conclusions—traits born of ability and self-confidence and developed by prosperity.

One of the best men we had on a locomotive was Andrew Cameron; at the same time he was one of the hardest to manage, because he was young and headstrong. Andy, a big, powerful fellow, ran opposite Felix Kennedy on the flier. The fast runs require young men. If you will notice, you will rarely see an old engineer on a fast passenger run. Even a young man can stand only a few years of that kind of work. High speed on a locomotive is a question of nerve and endurance—to put it bluntly, a question of flesh and blood.

"You don't think much of this strike, do you, Mr. Reed?" said Andy to me one night.

"Don't think there's going to be any, Andy."

He laughed knowingly.

"What actual grievance have the boys?" I asked.

"The trouble's on the East End," he replied evasively.

"Is that any reason for calling a thousand men out on this end?"

"If one goes out, they all go."

"Would you go out?"

"Would I? You bet!"

"A man with a home and a wife and a baby boy like yours ought to have more sense."

Getting up to leave, he laughed again contentedly. "That's all right. We'll bring you fellows to terms."

"Maybe," I reported as he closed the door. But I hadn't the slightest idea they would begin the attempt that night. I was at home and sound asleep when the caller tapped on my window. I threw up the sash; it was pouring rain and dark as a pocket.

"What is it, Barney? A wreck?" I exclaimed.

"Worse than that. Everything's tied up."

"What do you mean?"

"The engineers have struck."

"Struck? What time is it?"

"Half past 3. They went out at 3 o'clock." Throwing on my clothes, I floundered behind Barney's lantern to the depot. The superintendent was already in his office talking to the master mechanic.

Bulletins came in every few minutes from various points announcing trains tied up. Before long we began to hear from the East End. Chicago reported all engineers out; Omaha wired no trains moving. When the sun rose that morning our entire system, extending through seven states and territories, was absolutely paralyzed.

It was an astounding situation, but one that must be met. It meant either an ignominious surrender to the engineers or a fight to the death. For our part, we had only to wait for orders. It was just 6 o'clock when the chief train dispatcher, who was tapping at a key, said:

"Here's something from headquarters."

We crowded close around him. His pen flew across the clip; the message was addressed to all division superintendents. It was short, but at the end of it he wrote a name we rarely saw in our office. It was that of the railroad magnate we knew as "the old man," the president of the system, and his words were few:

"Move the trains!"

"Move the trains!" repeated the superintendent. "Yes, but trains can't be moved by pinch bars nor by main force."

We spent the day arguing with the strikers. They were friendly, but firm. Persuasion, entreaties, threats, we exhausted and ended just where we began, except that we had lost our tempers. The sun set without the turn of a wheel. The victory of the first day was certainly with the strikers.

Next day it looked pretty blue around the depot. Not a car was moved. The engineers and firemen were a unit. But the wires sung hard all that day and all that night. Just before midnight Chicago wired that No. 1—our big passenger train, the Denver flier—had started out on time, with the superintendent of motive power as engineer and a wiper for fireman. The message came from the second vice president. He promised to deliver the train to our division on time the next evening, and he asked, "Can you get it through to Denver?"

We looked at each other. At last all eyes gravitated toward Neighbor, our master mechanic.

The train dispatcher was waiting. "What shall I say?" he asked.

The division chief of the motive power was a tremendously big Irishman, with a voice like a fog horn. With-an instant's hesitation the answer came clear:

"Say yes!"

Every one of us started. It was throwing the gage of battle. Our word had gone out; the division was pledged; the fight was on.

Next evening the strikers through some mysterious channel got word that the flier was expected. About 9 o'clock a crowd of them began to gather round the depot.

It was after 1 o'clock when No. 1 pulled in, and the foreman of the Omaha roundhouse swung down from the locomotive cab. The strikers clustered around the engine like a swarm of angry bees, but that night, though there was plenty of jeering, there was no actual violence. When they saw Neighbor climb into the cab to take the run west there was a sullen silence.

Next day a committee of strikers, with Andy Cameron, very cavalier, at their head, called on me.

"Mr. Reed," said he officiously, "we've come to notify you not to run any more trains through here till this strike's settled. The boys won't stand it. That's all." With that he turned on his heel to leave with his following.

"Hold on, Cameron," I replied, raising my hand as I spoke; "that's not quite all. I suppose you men represent your grievance committee?"

"Yes, sir."

"I happen to represent, in the superintendent's absence, the management of this road. I simply want to say to you and to your committee that I take my orders from the president and the general manager—not from you nor anybody you represent. That's all."

Every hour the bitterness increased. We got a few trains through, but we were terribly crippled. As for freight, we made no pretense of moving it. Train loads of fruit and meat rotted in the yards. The strikers grew more turbulent daily. They beat our new men and crippled our locomotives. Then our troubles with the new men were almost as bad. They burned out our crown sheets; they got mixed up on orders all the time. They ran into open switches and into each other continually and had us very nearly crazy.

I kept tab on one of the new engineers for a week. He began by backing into a diner so hard that he smashed every dish in the car and ended by running into a siding a few days later and setting two tanks of oil on fire, that burned up a freight depot. I figured he cost us $40,000 the week he ran. Then he went back to selling windmills.

After this experience I was sitting in my office one evening, when a youngish fellow in a slouch hat opened the door and stuck his head in.

"What do you want?" I growled.

"Are you Mr. Reed?"

"What do you want?"

"I want to speak to Mr. Reed."

"Well, what is it?"

"Are you Mr. Reed?"

"Confound you, yes! What do you want?"

"Me? I don't want anything. I'm just asking; that's all."

His impudence staggered me so that I took my feet off the desk.

"Heard you were looking for men," he added.

"No," I snapped. "I don't want any men."

"Wouldn't be any show to get on an engine, would there?"

A week earlier I should have risen and fallen on his neck, but there had been others.

"There's a show to get your head broke," I suggested.

"I don't mind that if I get my time."

"What do you know about running an engine?"

"Run one three years."

"On a thrashing machine?"

"On the Philadelphia and Reading."

"Who sent you in here?"

"Just dropped in."

"Sit down."

I eyed him sharply as he dropped into a chair.

"When did you quit the Philadelphia and Reading?"

"About six months ago."

"Fired?"

"Strike."

I began to get interested. After a few more questions I took him into the superintendent's office, but at the door I thought it well to drop a hint.

"Look here, my friend, if you're a spy you'd better keep out of this. This man would wring your neck as quick as he'd suck an orange. See?"

"Let's tackle him anyhow," replied the fellow, eyeing me coolly.

I introduced him to Mr. Lancaster and left them together. Pretty soon the superintendent came into my office.

"What do you make of him, Reed?" said he.

"What do you make of him?" Lancaster studied a minute.

"Take him over to the roundhouse and see what he knows."

I walked over with the new find, chatting warily. When we reached a live engine I told him to look it over. He threw off his coat, picked up a piece of waste and swung into the cab.

"Run her out to the switch," said I, stepping up myself.

He pinched the throttle, and we steamed slowly out of the house. A minute showed he was at home on an engine.

"Can you handle it?" I asked as he shut off after backing down to the roundhouse.

"You use soft coal," he replied, trying the injector. "I'm used to hard. This injector is new to me. Guess I can work it, though."

"What did you say your name was?"

"I didn't say."

"What is it?" I asked curtly.

"Foley."

"Well, Foley, if you have as much sense as you have gall you ought to get along. If you act straight, you'll never want a job again as long as you live. If you don't, you won't want to live very long."

"Got any tobacco?"

"Here, Baxter," said I, turning to the roundhouse foreman, "this is Foley. Give him a chew, and mark him up to go out on 77 tonight. If he monkeys with anything around the house, kill him."

Baxter looked at Foley, and Foley looked at Baxter, and Baxter not getting the tobacco out quick enough, Foley reminded him he was waiting.

We didn't pretend to run freights, but I concluded to try the fellow on one, feeling sure that if he was crooked he would ditch it and skip.

So Foley ran a long string of empties and a car or two of rotten oranges down to Harvard Junction that night, with one of the dispatchers for pilot. Under my orders they had a train made up at the Junction for him to bring back to McCloud. They had picked up all the strays in the yards, including half a dozen cars of meat that the local board of health had condemned after it had laid out in the sun for two weeks and a car of butter we had been shifting around ever since the beginning of the strike.

When the strikers saw the stuff coming in next morning behind Foley they concluded I had gone crazy.

"What do you think of the track, Foley?" said I.

"Fair," he replied, sitting down on my desk. "Stiff hill down there by Zanesville."

"Any trouble to climb it?" I asked.

"For I had purposely given him a heavy train."

"Not with that car of butter. If you hold that butter another week, it will climb a hill without any engine."

"Can you handle a passenger train?"

"I guess so."

"I'm going to send you west on No. 1 tonight."

"Then you'll have to give me a fireman. That guy you sent out last night is a lightning rod peddler. The dispatcher threw most of the coal."

"I'll go with you myself, Foley. I can give you steam. Can you stand it to double back tonight?"

"I can stand it if you can."

When I walked into the roundhouse in the evening with a pair of overalls on Foley was in the cab getting ready for the run.

Neighbor brought the flier in from the east. As soon as he had uncoupled and got out of the way we backed down with the 448. It was the best engine we had left and, luckily for my back, an easy steamer. Just as we coupled to the mail car a crowd of strikers swarmed out of the dusk. They were in an ugly mood, and when Andy Cameron and Bat Nicholson sprang up into the cab I saw we were in for trouble.

"Look here, partner," exclaimed Cameron, laying a heavy hand on Foley's shoulder, "you don't want to take this train out, do you? You wouldn't beat honest workmen out of a job?"

"I'm not beating anybody out of a job. If you want to take out this train, take it out. If you don't, get out of this cab."

Cameron was nonplused. Nicholson, a surly brute, raised his fist menacingly.

"See here, boss," he growled, "we won't stand no scabs on this line."

"Get out of this cab."

"I'll promise you you'll never get out of it alive, my buck, if you ever get into it again!" cried Cameron, swinging down. Nicholson followed, muttering angrily. I hoped we were out of the scrape; but, to my consternation, Foley, picking up his oil can, got right down behind them and began filling his cups without the least attention to anybody.

Nicholson sprang on him like a tiger. The onslaught was so sudden that they and him under their feet in a minute. I jumped down, and Ben Buckley, the conductor, came running up. Between us we gave the little fellow a life. He squirmed out like a cat and backed instantly up against the tender.

"One at a time, and come on!" he cried. "If it's ten to one and on a man's back at that, we'll do it different." With a quick, peevish movement of his arm he drew a pistol and, pointing it squarely at Cameron, cried, "Get back!"

I caught a flash of his eye through the blood that streamed down his face. I wouldn't have given a switch key for the life of the man who crowded him at that minute. But just then Lancaster came up, and before the crowd realized it we had Foley, protesting angrily, back in the cab again.

"For heaven's sake, pull out of this before there's bloodshed, Foley," I cried, and, nodding to Buckley, Foley opened the choker.

It was a night run and a new track to him. I tried to fire and pilot both, but after Foley suggested once or twice that if I would tend to the coal he would tend to the curves I let him find them, and he found them all. I thought, before we got to Athens. He took big chances in his running, but there was a superb confidence in his bursts of speed which marked the fast runner and the experienced one.

At Athens we had barely two hours to rest before doubling back. I was never tired in my life till I struck the pillow that night, but before I got it warm the caller roused me out again. The eastbound flier was on time, or nearly so, and when I got into the cab for the run back Foley was just coupling on.

"Did you get a nap?" I asked as we pulled out.

"No; we slipped an eccentric coming up, and I've been under the engine ever since. Say, she's a bird, isn't she? She's all right. I couldn't run her coming up, but I've touched up her valve motion a bit, and I'll get action on her as soon as it's daylight."

"Don't mind getting action on my account, Foley; I'm shy on life insurance."

He laughed. "You're safe with me. I never killed man, woman or child in my life. When I do, I quit the cab. Give her plenty of diamonds, if you please," he added, letting her out full.

He gave me the ride of my life, but I hated to show scare, he was so coolly audacious himself. We had but one stop—for water—and after that all down grade. We bowled along as easy as ninepins, but the pace was a hair-raiser. After we passed Arickaree we never touched a thing but the high joints. The long, heavy train behind us flew round the bluffs once in awhile like the tail of a very capricious kite, yet somehow, and that's an engineer's magic, she always lit on the steel.

Day broke ahead, and between breaths I caught the glory of a sunrise on the plains from a locomotive cab window. When the smoke of the McCloud shops stained the horizon, remembering the ugly threats of the strikers, I left my seat to speak to Foley.

"I think you'd better swing off when you slow up for the yards and cut across to the roundhouse!" I cried, getting close to his ear, for we were on terrific speed. He looked at me inquiringly. "In that way you won't run into Cameron and his crowd at the depot," I added. "I can stop her all right."

He didn't take his eyes off the track. "I'll take the train to the platform," said he.

"Isn't that a crossing cut ahead?" he added suddenly as we swung round a hill west of town.

"Yes, and a bad one."

He reached for the whistle and gave the long warning screams. I set the bell ringer and stooped to open the furnace door to cool the fire, when—chug!

I flew up against the water gauges like a coupling pin. The monster engine reared right up on her head. Scrambling to my feet, I saw the new man clutching the air lever with both hands, and every wheel on the train was screeching. I jumped to his side and looked over his shoulder. On the crossing just ahead a big white horse, dragging a buggy, plunged and reared frantically. Standing on the buggy seat a baby boy clung, bewildered, to the lazyback—not another soul in sight. All at once the horse swerved sharply back. The buggy lurched half over. The lines seemed to be caught around one wheel. The little fellow clung on, but the crazy horse, instead of running, began a hornpipe right between the deadly rails.

I looked at Foley in despair. From the monstrous quivering leaps of the great engine I knew the drivers were in the clutch of the mighty air brake, but the relentless momentum of the train was none the less sweeping us down at deadly speed on the baby. Between the two tremendous forces the locomotive shivered like a gigantic beast. I shrank back in horror, but the little man at the throttle, throwing the last ounce of air on the burning wheels, leaped from his box with a face transfigured.

"Take her!" he cried, and, never shifting his eyes from the cut, he shot through his open window and darted like a cat along the running board to the front.

Not a hundred feet separated us from the crossing. I could see the baby's curls blowing in the wind. The horse suddenly leaped from across the track to the side of it. That left the buggy quivering with the rails, but not twelve inches clear. The way the wheels were cramped a single step ahead would throw the hind wheels into the train; a step backward would shove the front wheels into it. It was appalling.

Foley, clinging with one hand to a rod ght bracket, dropped down on the steam chest and swung far out. As the cowcatcher shot past Foley's long arm dipped into the buggy like the sweep of a connecting rod and caught the boy by the breeches. The impetus of our speed threw the child high in the air, but Foley's grip was on the little overalls, and as the youngster bounded back he caught it close. I saw the horse give a leap. It sent the hind wheels into the corner of the baggage car. There was a crash like the report of a hundred rifles, and the buggy flew in the air. The big horse was thrown fifty feet, but Foley, with a great light in his eyes and the baby boy in his arm, crawled, laughing, into the cab.

Thinking he would take the engine again, I tried to take the baby. Take it? Well, I think not!

"Hi, there, buster," shouted the little engineer wildly, "that's a corking pair of breeches on you, son! I caught the kid right by the seat of the pants," he called over to me, laughing hysterically. "Heavens, little man, I wouldn't've struck you for all the gold in Alaska. I've got a chunk of a boy in Reading as much like him as a twin brother. What were you doing all alone in that buggy? Whose kid do you suppose it is? What's your name, son?"

Foley dropped down on the steam chest and swung far out.

At his question I looked at the child again, and I started. I had certainly seen him before, and had I not, his father's features were too well stamped on the childish face for me to be mistaken.

"Foley," I cried, all amazed, "that's Cameron's boy—little Andy!"

He tossed the baby the higher; he looked the happier; he shouted the louder.

"The deuce it is! Well, son, I'm mighty glad of it." And I certainly was glad—mightily glad, as Foley expressed it—when we pulled up at the depot, and I saw Andy Cameron, with a wicked look, pushing to the front through the threatening crowd. With an ugly growl, he made for Foley.

"I've got business with you—son!"—

"I've got a little with you, son," retorted Foley, stepping leisurely down from the cab. "I struck a buggy back here at the first cut, and I hear it was yours." Cameron's eyes began to bulge. "I guess the outfit's damaged some, all but the boy. Here, kid," he added, turning for me to hand him the child, "here's your dad."

The instant the youngster caught sight of his parent he set up a yell. Foley, laughing, passed him into the astonished father's arms before the latter could say a word. Just then a boy, running and squeezing through the crowd, cried to Cameron that his horse had run away from the house with the baby in the buggy and that Mrs. Cameron was having a fit.

Cameron stood like one daft, and the boy, catching sight of the baby that instant, panted and stared in an idiotic state.

"Andy," said I, getting down and laying a hand on his shoulder, "if these fellows want to kill this man let them do it alone—you'd better keep out. Only this minute he has saved your boy's life."

The sweat stood out on the big engineer's forehead like dew. I told the story. Cameron tried to speak, but he tried again and again before he could find his voice.

"Mate," he stammered, "you've been through a strike yourself—you know what it means, don't you? But if you've got a baby—" he gripped the boy tighter to his shoulder.

"I have, partner; three of 'em."

"Then you know what this means," said Andy, huskily putting out his hand to Foley. He gripped the little man's fist hard, and, turning, walked away through the crowd.

Somehow it put a damper on the boys. Bat Nicholson was about the only man left who looked as if he wanted to eat somebody, and Foley, slinging his blouse over his shoulder, walked up to Bat and tapped him on the shoulder.

"Stranger," said he gently, "could you oblige me with a chew of tobacco?"

Bat glared at him an instant, but Foley's nerve won.

Flushing a bit, Bat stuck his hand into his pocket, took it out, felt hurriedly in the other pocket, and, with some confusion, acknowledged he was short. Felix Kennedy intervened with a slab, and the three men fell at once to talking about the accident.

A long time afterward some of the striking engineers were taken back, but none of those who had been guilty of actual violence. This barred Andy Cameron, who, though not worse than many others, had been less prudent and, while we all felt sorry for him after the other boys had gone to work, Lancaster repeatedly and positively refused to reinstate him.

Several times, though, I saw Foley and Cameron in confab, and one day up came Foley to the superintendent's office, leading little Andy, in his overalls, by the hand. They went into Lancaster's office together, and the door was shut for a long time.

When they came out little Andy had a piece of paper in his hand. "Hang on to it, son," cautioned Foley, "but you can show it to Mr. Reed if you want to."

The youngster handed me the paper. It was an order directing Andrew Cameron to report to the master mechanic for service in the morning.

I happened over at the roundhouse one day nearly a year later, when Foley was showing Cameron a new engine just in from the east. The two men were become great cronies; that day they fell to talking over the strike.

"There was never but one thing I really laid up against this man," said Cameron to me.

"What's that?" asked Foley.

"Why the way you shoved that pistol into my face the first night you took out No. 1."

"I never shoved any pistol into your face." So saying, he stuck his hand into his pocket with the identical motion he used the night of the strike, and leveled at Andy, just as he had done there—a plug of tobacco. "That's all I ever pulled on you, son. I never carried a pistol in my life."

Cameron looked at him, then he turned to me, with a tired expression. "I've seen a good many men, with a good many kinds of nerve, but I'll be splintered if ever I saw any one man with all kinds of nerve till I struck Foley."

How and When to Eat.

There are a few plain facts about how and when to eat which it would be worth a man's while to keep in mind even when well. If you are in a hurry, eat lightly. There is no virtue in gulping down a large meal just because it is mealtime. While the mind is actively engaged in the details and responsibilities of business the digestive apparatus is in no condition to undertake heavy work. The blood supply is drained off elsewhere, giving all the contribution it can to the brain, and if a quantity of food be taken in it simply remains undigested in the stomach. Worry, unsettled mind, low spirits, all tend to delay or to stop the activities of the alimentary canal. Students who go at hard head work immediately after meals often suffer from indigestion. So do letter carriers and other people whose meals are followed by prolonged physical exertion. Indeed, any kind of effort which forces the blood flow away from the alimentary region is injurious after hearty eating.—Dr. Gulick in World's Work.

Indian Medicine Bags.

The medicine bags of Navajoes, Zulus and Apaches, all kindred tribes, contain a curious powder known as corn pollen or hoddentia. This powder, which is the pollen of a rush and also of maize, appears to be used as a medicine, being eaten by the sick and put on the head or other parts to ease pain, but principally as a sacred offering to the sun and moon and as a sanctifier of everything. A pinch of it is thrown toward the sun and then toward the four winds for help in war or the chase, is put on the trail of a snake to prevent harm from it, placed on the tongue of the tired hunter as a restorative, hung in bags round the necks of infants as a preservative and sprinkled on the dead. In fact, every action of these Indians is sanctified by this powder, so that, as Captain Bourke writes in the ninth volume of "The Report of the Bureau of Ethnology" (Smithsonian), "plenty of accident has come to mean that a particular performance or place is sacred."

England's Coast Lights.

"The coastwise lights of England," of which Kipling sings, have been increasing in brilliancy as well as in number ever since the dawn of the nineteenth century. In that dark age weary mariners crawled into port by the flickering glare of twenty-five beacons and six floating lights. Now they may glide safely into haven under the powerful beams of 880. Lighthouses are as ancient as civilization. The Pharos of Alexander flung its light on the decks of oriental barges 2,237 years ago. The Romans, who loved the light, have left the ruins of one of their lighthouses on a cliff at Boulogne, while at Dover may still be seen all that remains of another. Petroleum and the electric light have made the early nineteenth century beacons ridiculous. On the summit of the tower an open grate was fed with billets of wood and later with coal. Scotland abandoned coal altogether for more up to date methods in 1816 and England six years afterward.

Mermaids and Mermen. Nearly all nations have folklore and fairy tale accounts of mermaids and sometimes of mermen. Even the American Indians had their "woman fish" and "man fish." The Chinese tell stories about their sea women of the southern seas. Sometimes mermaids and mermen are represented as leaving the water and living with human beings, but more frequently they are pictured as being so attractive that they sometimes will lure human beings to destruction in the depths of the sea. These myths have been utilized by many poets and have even been used for stories "with a moral."—St. Nicholas.

Ramon Hughes (colored) Dead.

Ramon, the youngest son of Joseph and Adeline Hughes (col.) was born Dec. 11th, 1884, and died April 28 1907. He was twenty-two years four months and seventeen days old. He leaves a mother, four brothers, one sister and a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. He professed a hope in Christ in the autumn of 1904, and soon thereafter he became a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian church at this place, in which he lived a faithful member until called away by death. He was a lover of Sabbath School and rarely failed to be at his post at the opening services. He had served quite a while as secretary of the Sabbath school, and it was said in presence of the writer: "That Ramon was the best secretary we ever had." Ramon was a good boy, he was an honored son, of an honored father. The writer preached his funeral to a large audience of his friends and relatives, after which his body was conveyed to the old family graveyard on Crooked Creek where it was deposited to remain until the resurrection morn. Clothing of A Dead Child Gives Family Diphtheria.

Huntingburg, Ind., May 1.—The family of John Ellis, who reside near Heilman, a small town several miles south of this city, is having a siege of diphtheria, the disease having been caught in an unusual manner.

About fourteen years ago a child of Mr. Ellis died of diphtheria, and after its burial the child's clothes were packed away in a trunk and the trunk locked. For fourteen years this trunk was not opened until one day last week, when one of the children opened it and took out the clothes of her departed sister. A few days later the child became sick, and the physician called pronounced the disease diphtheria, and said the child had caught it from the clothes that had been packed away in the trunk. Every member of the Ellis family is now sick with diphtheria, excepting the father. The mother's condition is reported quite serious.—Louisville Herald.

Situations Guaranteed.

We do not guarantee situations to prospective students in order to get their patronage. Schools of merit do not resort to such dishonest practices.

Face schools "guarantee" situations in order to secure students, because they have no other inducements to offer.

Our work is so thorough that a guarantee is superfluous. Business men are so eager to get competent help here that a large percentage of our students take positions before they graduate.

See us before making arrangements for your business and shorthand education at some inferior, fake school. We will take pleasure in telling you all about the loopholes in the "position guarantee" of dishonest schools. Catalogues free.

Letter From Texas.

Hereford, Texas., April 21st, 1907. Mr. S. M. Jenkins,

DEAR SIR:—As I am at this part at present and stopping with our old friend, Joe Hunter Travis. Hereford is a nice prohibition town of a population of 3500, full of churches, schools and good people, and I think surrounded by a good country, with some very fine cattle and stock, a nice little river to fish in, game, plenty of jack rabbits, chickens, birds, prairie wolfs and antelopes, also ducks. It has been snowing for the last two days to beat the band. Travis and I are going duck hunting to-morrow if the weather will permit. This may look strange, nevertheless I find it so, your friend D. N. RILEY.

CATARRH CAN BE CURED.

Kill The Germs by Breathing Hy-o-mei. Gives Quick Relief.

Many people who have suffered with catarrh for years naturally think they cannot be cured, and become discouraged.

The reason they have failed of cure is because they have not treated the disease with the local remedy, Hy-o-mei, which is breathed thru a neat pocket inhaler so that its healing medication reaches the most remote aircells, kills all catarrh germs and restores the mucous membrane of the nose, throat and lungs to a healthy condition.

Catarrh is really a local disease and to cure it, it must be treated by a remedy which reaches every spot in the nose and throat where the disease germs lodge. Hy-o-mei does this and gives relief from the first day's use.

A complete Hy-o-mei outfit cost but $1.00 and Haynes & Taylor give a guarantee with every package to refund the money unless it cures.

The Harnessing of The World.

The harnessing of the Kern river, 128 miles from Los Angeles, Cal., and the converting of the enormous water power of the canyon into electricity is nearly completed, and soon over the miles of cables, supported on steel towers, will flash the world's highest long distance voltage, 75,000 volts. This enormous power will be used in and about the city of Los Angeles.

It was in 1900 that a hydraulic engineer inspected the Kern canyon and noted the marvelous water power wasting itself in noisytumbles down the steep grades. The Edison Company of Los Angeles became interested and the following spring a surveying party invaded the canyon with instruments and notebooks. Soon followed an army of workmen, heavy wagons and tons of freight, machinery and building materials. The canyon was practically inaccessible until a road ten feet wide and two miles long had been blasted from the solid granite shoulder of the cliff. Camps sprang up in a day with cook sheds, hospitals, workshops, etc. A small temporary power house with 400 horse power installed to run the air compressors, and hundreds of yards of piping carried the compressed air to the drills and other machinery. Fighting every inch of the way with dynamite, twenty tunnels, totaling nearly 9 miles in length, were cut through the rocky walls. It is the longest tunnel system of its kind in the world. The shafts are uniformly lined with 8 inches of concrete.

It was with the greatest difficulty that some of the heavy machinery reached its destination at the camp. One of the steepest trails was sheer and very abrupt for nearly half a mile and a huge 1000 pound sled was made, its runners shod with iron an inch thick and six inches wide. Onto it seven and eight tons of machinery were placed and men with thick snub ropes steadied its perilous descent.

The dam is 45 feet wide at its base, fastened to the bed rock about 18 feet below the level of the stream, and backs the water up for more than a mile. From this lake the waters pour into the intake and glide along the canal about 12 miles to the tunnels, where they are huled down the steel mains many hundred feet to the gigantic impulse wheels in the power house below.

The power house equipment consists of the impulse wheels whirling the four mammoth 5,000 kilowatt generators. Five sets of set-up 1667 kw. transformers are used. To take care of the 75,000 volts at the Los Angeles end of the line thirteen 1500 kw. transformers are required. The electric equipment is furnished by the General Electric Company, built at Schenectady, N. Y., and shipped across the continent to serve its purpose in the wild canyons of the Sierra mountains.

The work is an experiment, but its success is now assured. The Edison Electrical Company is accustomed to this sort of work. In its time it has installed the first multiphase power transmission, the longest line, the highest voltage and the highest hydraulic operating head in the world; the first synchronous motor and the first induction motor ever turned out by the General Electric Company, the first oil break switches, the first revolving field generators; the first 10,000 volt generators, the first high potential measuring instruments, the first steel towers and the first steam turbine generators west of Chicago.

MISS MILLER

To Become a Bride in June as Result of Tour-to-Europe Trip.

A romance begun on the ocean, during the first days of the tour to Europe, which was given by the Courier-Journal last summer will reach its climax on June 24, when Miss Maud Miller, one of the winners in the Courier-Journal's contests will become Mrs. T. Alanson Briggs, says a dispatch from Elkton.

Mr. Briggs is a son of the Rev. Dr. Charles A. Briggs, one of the best known Episcopal ministers in New York. Miss Miller is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Miller of Elkton, and is one of the most popular young women in this section of the state.

Miss Miller was one of the contestants for the tour to Europe offered by the Courier-Journal, and she won in this district by a majority of about 100,000. She joined the party at Louisville and started on the trip, little thinking that the result would be to change the whole course of her life. On board the steamer, crossing to Europe, was Mr. Briggs. He met the pretty Kentucky girl among others of the party and at once fell in love with her. She seemed to return the affection and even before the ship landed the two were regarded as sweethearts.

Mr. Briggs accompanied the party for a few days after they reached England and was devoted in his attentions to Miss Miller. After they both returned to this country, Mr. Briggs came to Kentucky frequently and renewed his suit. He won her hand and on June 24 they will be united in marriage. They will leave at once for New York and from there will sail for another tour of Europe, but this time they will spend most of their time in Italy.—Ex.

Does Your Heart Beat

Yes. 100,000 times each day. Does it send out good blood or bad blood? You know, for good blood is good health; bad blood, bad health. And you know precisely what to take for bad blood—Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Doctors have endorsed it for 60 years.

One frequent cause of bad blood is a sluggish liver. This produces constipation. Poisonous substances are then absorbed into the blood, instead of being removed from the body daily as nature intended. Keep the bowels open with Ayer's Pills, liver pills. All vegetables.

BALLOON AT GOLCONDA

Aeronauts Able to Make But 130 Miles Due to Changeable Air Currents.

Golconda, Ill., May, 1.—Captain Charles De F. Chandler, U. S. signal service, and J. C. McCoy, of New York, failed to break the long distance balloon record and win the Lahm cup. Their balloon, which left St. Louis, Mo., yesterday evening, landed five miles north of Golconda, Ill., this afternoon. Golconda is only 130 miles from St. Louis. Changeable air currents caused the failure. The balloon was brought to Golconda in wagons.

McCoy goes with it from here to New York, while Captain Chandler goes to Washington.

Hiding Place Found Proves too Good.

Owensboro, Ky., April 26.—While playing hide and seek last night, Robert Hathaway, fourteen years of age, secured a hiding place which required the combined efforts of an entire neighborhood to find him, and when he was found he was in an unconscious condition. The boy got in a ditch which is being dug for water pipes, and about four feet of earth caved in on him. A companion with him gave the alarm, but it was some time before the men of the neighborhood could shovel the dirt off the boy.

The quickest way to kill a corn crop is to work the soil when it is too wet, that leaves the soil in bad shape to cultivate and bakes and dries out just when the moisture is most needed. Take this for what it is worth.
